LSU LIBRARY DEDICATION—

Dr. Harris said that young people do not readily seek the management of the public's business, adding that this is not surprising. But he warned that if the democratic process depends upon competence in public trust and if this competence rests upon adequate enlightenment and understanding of public issues by the voters, education without more assistance and less diversion to trivia may be unequal to its portion of the task.

Dr. Strozier said that educators reject the idea of colleges and universities serving as ant question the college administrator faces trade schools and said that the most important concerns the students, their vocational choices and the way they attain independence of thought and inquiry. He warned that in the current frenzy over science there is a danger that we will develop a generation so over-specialized that our national mind will be inadequately equipped to fight a cold intellectual or warm spiritual war against the dark way of life. Finally, he said, the sense of skilled manpower derives from a balanced liberal education such as that which a good library symbolizes.

President Wilson called attention to the heightened role of education as an instrumentality of social survival and progress, adding this brought a growing realization that we must look increasingly to colleges and universities as the main thought centers of society. The crying need of the troubled world today, he said, is less for more potent outer space missiles than for more decency, ordered freedom and the assurance of a lasting peace in the space all share together on the earth's surface. And finally, he said it may well be that ultimate success in a cold war will not be so much a matter of superior technology as of the most effective techniques for internal social control and for cross-cultural manipulation without benefit of force.

Meetings of Louisiana college and university librarians followed the formal dedicatory program. Speakers were Dr. Robert H. Muller, assistant director of libraries, Universities of Michigan; Dr. Maurice F. Tauber, Melvil Dewey professor in the School of Library Service, Columbia University, and editor of College and Research Libraries, and Dr. Robert B. Downs, dean of library administration at the University of Illinois.
